2. Upon berthing at the pier a group of security officials, consisting of a male doctor, customs and immigration officials and two soldiers boarded the vessel. The ship was not searched, nor was any of ship's equipment sealed and the officials did not state whether it was against port regulations for crew members to take pictures within the harbor or ashore. A woman official issued all crew members liberty passes, which were checked, along with seamen's papers, by a guard at the yard gate leading into the city. No curfew was placed on liberty and no guards were stationed on the pier. On different occasions members of our crew were stopped and questioned, within the confines of the shipyard, by men in civilian dress. These men requested the crew members to produce identification papers after they were warned about loitering in and around the pier. These men dressed in civilian clothes were police officials stationed throughout the yards to insure that no unauthorized personnel proceeded through the areas unless on business which necessitated such travel. Soundings indicated the depth of water alongside the pier to be 23 feet while that out-board of our ship was 35 feet.
3. Port Facilities
Two motor tugboats in good condition assisted in berthing our ship, starboard side to, at the Silesian Quay, which was built on wood pilings and whose surface was constructed of cement. Each side of the quay is equipped to service two ships of 10 thousand-ton capacity simultaneously. I observed no new construction or repair work within the vicinity of this pier. I noted 10 or 12 five-ton electric cranes, [redacted], on the pier, and two sets of railway tracks served each side. The tracks extend to within 100 feet of the seaward end. Two diesel-driven locomotives in good condition and three coal-burning locomotives in poor condition were on these tracks. Our cargo was discharged by means of five electric railway cranes over a three-day period, and two gangs of five men each indirectly assisted in unloading the coal. The cranes were operated by men and in fact [redacted] no female laborers on the pier. The laborers were competent but unhappy with existing conditions.

4. Our ship received 200 tons of good drinking water via one rubber-covered pipe line which ran along the surface of the quay. This pipe was approximately two inches in diameter and contained six outlets at different intervals along its length. One small old drydock, housing a three thousand-ton Polish vessel undergoing repairs at the time of our visit, was located at position 54° 32' 50" N - 18° 33' 20" E. One large oil tank was located at approximate position 54° 32' 50" N - 18° 33' 05" E and another oil tank was located at approximate position 53° 31' 15" N - 18° 33' 04" E. Two small fishing vessels constituted a wreckage at position 53° 31' 46" N - 18° 33' 47" E.

5. Ships Observed

The Liberian freighter Harrier was loading coal [redacted] at the Silesia Quay, [redacted] freighter discharging general cargo at [redacted] Quay. Numerous fishing vessels of 150 to 200 tons were located in the harbor. 12 small Soviet warships, somewhat similar to the Zheleznyakov Class 305'1". in very poor condition, in the area of Putziger Reisternest at approximate position 54° 35' N - 18° 40' E.
